Matt,

FYI, please see the email below. It looks like there may be a White House meeting this week that could include discussion on GKM. I'm hoping you already know about it, but just in case...

Hi Shaun and Ed.

Related to my previous email regarding DOE's recent engagement on the Animas River spill and my involvement, there is a Committee on Environment, Natural Resources, and Sustainability (CENRS) meeting next week in DC out of the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy. While I haven't seen the final agenda, it does appear that interagency discussions on the Animas River spill are planned and hence our initial engagement is timely. I'm not sure who the EPA rep will be, but Dr. Gary Geenaerdt of DOE's Office of Science will be participating; it was he who approved the rapid DOE funding for my sampling trip last week.

So just a note to alert you both that this is soon to be on the table and that the potential for subsequent interagency discussions would certainly seem timely.

Regards, Ken
